Appeals Court Reverses Trial Court's Dismissal of Injured Plaintiff's First and Third Party Cases

In Johnson v. Recca, ___ Mich App _____ decided April 5, 2011 (Docket 294363) the plaintiff, while a pedestrian, was hit by a vehicle driven by defendant Recca. She was knocked backwards and fell on her back and hit her head on the cement.

At the time of the accident, plaintiff lived with Harrietta Johnson, her ex-mother-in-law. Neither woman owned a vehicle.

The Defendant had a no-fault insurance policy with Allstate Insurance Company. The plaintiff sued Allstate for first party no-fault benefits including attendant care and replacement services provided by Harrietta Johnson.

She also sued defendant Recca for pain and suffering and excess economic losses for replacement services provided beyond the three year statutory period under the No-Fault Act.

The trial court dismissed Plaintiff's claim for excess replacement service losses, holding that replacement services were not "allowable expenses" under § 3107 and thus were not compensable damages under the excess economic loss provision in a third party tort case.

Second, the trial court held that plaintiff was not entitled to noneconomic damages because she had a history of back problems before the accident and could not prove that she suffered a serious impairment of body function.

The first issue in the case was whether the "excess" "damages for allowable expenses," under § 500.3135(3)(c), that an injured person may recover in a third-party action include expenses for services commonly known as replacement services that are rendered more than three years after the date of the accident.

The Court of Appeals reversed the trial court holding that replacement service expenses include allowable expenses and thus are compensable in a third party case.

The Court reasoned that because replacement "services" are for a person's "care", they are an "allowable expense" (which includes "services... for a person care..") and thus compensable as an excess loss under § 3135.

The Court further stated that the reason replacement services are addressed separately in § 3107, is because the Legislature wanted to place limits on the amount a no-fault insurer would be required to pay for replacement services as opposed to all other allowable expenses which are unlimited in scope.

The Court also held that a factual dispute existed as to whether the plaintiff sustained a herniated disc in the accident that was not present before the event.

In addition, the Court stated whether the Plaintiff's life was sufficiently impacted needed to be reviewed under the new standards set forth in The Supreme Court's decision in McCormick v Carrier, 487 Mich 180 (2010).

Accordingly, the Court reversed the trial court decision to dismiss the Plaintiff's third party case based upon the serious impairment of body function issue.

Court Holds That Plaintiff Suffered Serious Impairment But Not Disfigurement

In Dybas v. Madziar, unpublished opinion per curiam of the Court of Appeals decided April 7, 2011, (Docket No. 295512) the plaintiff sued the defendant for non-economic loss under the Michigan No-Fault Act, MCL 500.3101 et seq.

The Defendant requested that the trial court dismiss the plaintiff's case, claiming that the plaintiff's injuries did not constitute a [serious] impairment of body function or permanent serious disfigurement under § 3135 of the No-Fault Act.

The trial court denied the defendant's motion, finding a question of fact with regard to whether the plaintiff's injuries impaired his general ability to lead his normal life and as to whether the plaintiff suffered a permanent serious disfigurement. The Defendant appealed.

The Court of Appeals found that the August 2005 collision caused the plaintiff to suffer a "[h]ematoma, left knee prepatellar bursa."

On September 14, 2005, the plaintiff's orthopedic surgeon performed outpatient surgery using general anesthesia on plaintiff's left knee, which consisted of a "debridement/closure of left knee."

The Plaintiff testified regarding his inability to bear weight on his leg, which was reflected in his doctor's records; plaintiff's functional limitations, which were reflected in the physical therapy records; and plaintiff's difficulty with repetitive bending, about which plaintiff testified extensively, indicating that his doctor restricted his activities.

In addition, before the accident, the plaintiff's normal manner of living consisted of an active lifestyle outside of work, which included jogging, bowling, working out, and riding his bicycle, and he testified to effects of his injury that impacted his ability to conduct that normal manner of living for at least three years following the accident.

The Court held that being able to move one's knee is an important body function as a matter of law.

In addition, the Court held that the plaintiff demonstrated that his "pre-incident manner of living was affected" by his injury.

Consequently, the Court held that the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to dismiss the plaintiff's case.

However, the Court stated that the plaintiff failed to establish that the scars on his knees are permanent serious disfigurements. Both scars were less than 3-1/2 inches in length and, although there was some discoloration on both scars, they appeared to be partially covered by hair.

In addition, although the scars may be permanent, the Court stated that the scars do not rise to the level of being permanent serious disfigurements because the scars do not meet the requirement of being "serious." MCL 500.3135 (2)(a)(ii).

Accordingly, the Court held that issue of whether plaintiff suffered a permanent serious disfigurement should not have been left to the jury and summary disposition for the defendant on this claim was warranted.

ASK DAN - The No-Fault Insurance Expert

Q: I operate a rehabilitation program and have a minor client where the mother is acting as the case manager. The insurance company has rejected my bill stating that they will only pay me $40 for a three hour session where the reasonable and customary rate is $600. The insurer claims that the mother negotiated this reduced rate - without my knowledge. Do I have to accept this reduced rate?

Dan: No. The mother has no authority to make deals with the insurance company on how much to pay a provider. Your company was not a party to that contract and thus is not bound to accept the reduced rate. You should demand that your bill be reviewed as to whether your charges are "reasonable charges" under MCL 500.3107 not in relation to the agreement with the mom.
